ACADEMIC DEAN

ACADEMIC DEAN

Academic Dean

Academic Deans have significant authority over a specific academic area such as admissions, student affairs or financial aid. They assist presidents, hire faculty, help with big decisions, develop budgets and establish academic policies and programs. Most Academic Deans begin their careers as professors in a college or university for which a doctoral degree is also required. Computer literacy and a background in accounting or statistics are helpful in admissions and financial work.

PRINCIPAL

Principal

Principals manage elementary and secondary schools, working to ensure high-quality instruction. They set the academic tone and actively work with teachers to develop good education programs, develop mission statements and set performance goals and objectives. They visit classrooms, observe teaching methods, review goals and examine learning materials. Principals must use clear, objective guidelines for teacher appraisals, because pay often is based on performance ratings.

LIBRARIAN

LIBRARIAN

Librarian

Librarians purchase and organize information sources to help users of school libraries find books, magazines, newspapers and websites. Due to the rapid changes in technology, they must have knowledge of a wide variety of scholarly and public information sources. They must also follow trends related to publishing, computers and the media in order to oversee the selection and organization of library materials. Librarians manage staff as well as develop and direct information programs and systems for the public to ensure that information is organized in a manner that meets users' needs.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL TEACHER

Elementary School Teacher

Elementary School Teachers instruct children in kindergarten through fifth grade in a wide range of academic, social and emotional skills. In some schools, two or more Elementary School Teachers work as a team and are jointly responsible for a group of students in at least one subject. In other schools, they may teach one special subject—usually music, art, reading, science, math or physical education—to a number of classes. A small but growing number of Elementary School Teachers instruct multilevel classrooms, with students at several different learning levels.

SPORTS COACH

Sports Coach

Sports Coaches guide and train student athletes in indoor and outdoor school-sponsored sports. They organize, instruct, train and lead athletes in both individual and team sports. They train athletes for competition by holding practice sessions to perform drills that improve the athletes' form, technique, skills and stamina. A good understanding of their sport and of the human body is helpful. They often have assistance from sports instructors and in some individual sports, sports instructors may take on the role of a Sports Coach.

AUDIOLOGIST

Audiologist

Audiologists examine individuals of all ages and identify those with the symptoms of hearing loss and other auditory, balance and related sensory problems. Using audiometers, computers and other testing devices, they measure the level at which a person begins to hear sounds, how well a person distinguishes between sounds and the impact of hearing loss on an individual's daily life. In addition, Audiologists use computer equipment to evaluate and diagnose balance disorders. They interpret these results to make a diagnosis and determine a course of treatment.

PRESCHOOL TEACHER

Preschool Teacher

Preschool Teachers work with small groups of preschool children in an unstructured situation for a few hours each day. They use children's play to further language and vocabulary development, improve social skills and introduce science and math concepts. Usually, a less structured approach, including small-group lessons, one-on-one instruction and learning through creative activities such as art, dance and music, is adopted to teach preschool children. Preschool Teachers can work at preschools, day-care centers, public and private elementary schools and even employer-sponsored centers.
